Since my employment in 1992, I continue working with the military projects through BCTR. This work is primarily for U.S. Army IMCOM G9 Family Programs Family Advocacy Program (FAP) and in the previous few years with other Military Army and DoD programs. I continue working with subject matter experts within the military services and the university to provide Army and DoD family service providers with training materials that help address their program standards, which support their work with service members and families. This is accomplished in part by up-dating research-based child abuse and domestic abuse prevention information and best practice guidelines, and supporting evaluation efforts for these and other prevention programs. This effort requires assisting with program evaluation planning, development and analysis of surveys or measurements, and assisting in data analysis and report writing.
