

---

LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS

William Ascher is Director of the Center for International Development Research at Duke University and Professor of Public Policy Studies and Political Science at Duke. This research is part of a broader assessment of natural-resource policy failures that will be published in the forthcoming book, Why Governments Waste Natural Resources (Johns Hopkins University Press).

Timothy P. Barnard is completing his doctorate with the History Department of the University of Hawaii.

Christopher Barr is the Assistant Director of the Jefferson Avenue Childhood Development Center in Rochester, New York, where he works with inner-city youth. His ongoing research focuses on the politics of the Indonesian timber sector.

Siddharth Chandra is Assistant Professor of Economics in the Graduate School of Public and International Affairs at the University of Pittsburgh. His research focuses on the economic history of Indonesia during the colonial period, and he is currently conducting a study on wage differentials between ethnic Chinese and ethnic Malays in the Dutch East Indies.

Liesbeth Dolk obtained her PhD from the Department of Southeast Asian Studies of Leiden University with a thesis analyzing aspects of the Indonesian and Dutch intellectual climate on Java during the colonial period. Her research interests include Dutch-Indies colonial literature, modern Indonesian literature, and teaching Dutch as a foreign language. From 1995-1997 she was a senior lecturer at the Sorbonne (Paris).

Paul K. Gellert is Assistant Professor of Rural Sociology at Cornell University.

Jeffrey Hadler is completing his PhD in History at Cornell University.

Michael Malley is a doctoral candidate in political science at the University of Wisconsin-Madison.

Kathrin Oester is an anthropologist with a specialization in visual anthropology and representation-theory. She is currently editing a film and writing a book that analyzes fieldwork in Highland Jambi, Indonesia.

James T. Siegel is Professor of Anthropology at Cornell University.

Heinzpeter Znoj is Assistant Professor in the Institut für Ethnologie, Universität Bern, Switzerland.