

CURRENT DATA ON THE INDONESIAN MILITARY ELITE

July 1, 1989–January 1, 1992

The Editors

A central feature of the brief analysis contained in our last listing of Current Data (Indonesia 48 [October 1989]) was evidence of increasing tensions between President Suharto (and his Palace circle) and a senior echelon of active Army officers led by their doyen, General L.B. ("Benny") Murdani. The most striking signs of these tensions were:

1) The President's abrupt dismissal of Murdani from command of the Armed Forces on February 27, 1988, shortly before the March session of the MPR which was to "choose" a President and Vice-President for the following five years. Since, as late as May 1988, Suharto had gone out of his way to give Murdani a one-year extension of his active duty status before retirement, the latter would have expected to stay in dignified office at least till after the new administration was formed.

2) The extraordinary parliamentary outburst by Brig. Gen. Ibrahim Saleh against the President's choice, announced on March 11, of Lt. Gen. Soedharmono, palace confidant and head of the Golkar machine, to be his Vice-President.

In that earlier analysis, it had been argued that these tensions were likely to increase in severity. This forecast was being clearly, if gradually, fulfilled up to November 12, 1991, when there occurred a military massacre of dozens of young East Timorese at the Santa Cruz cemetery in Dili. Thanks to the fortuitous presence of several foreign journalists, one of whom managed to videotape part of the killing, the massacre became world news. The political fallout from this disaster has abruptly widened the conflict between the Palace and the bulk of the military leadership.

Before turning to a discussion of the current crisis, it is useful to look at the aggregate data assembled below to see what longer-term tendencies they may reveal.

At the broadest level it is clear that Javanese dominance of the top echelons of the military has remained unchanged. Incomplete data on ethnicity suggest that at least 60%, and perhaps as many as 70%, of the leading officers are Javanese, who are thus represented seven times as strongly as the next ranked ethnic group, the Sundanese (8%). It is interesting, however, that there now seems to be a wider general spread among ethnicities than hitherto: Acehnese, Balinese, Bantenese, Banjarese, Buginese, Butonese, Chinese (!), Madurese, Malays, Mandailing Bataks, Menadonese, Palembangese, Sapirook Bataks, Sumbawanese, Toba Bataks, and Torajanese are all, if minimally, represented. Ethnic distribution among the powerful 10 Kodam Commanders is also rather new and interesting. For the commander of Kodam 3 (West Java) is a native Sundanese, of Kodam 5 (East Java and Madura) a native Madurese, of Kodam 6 (Kalimantan) a native Banjarese, and of Kodam 8 (Sulawesi) a native of Sulawesi. It has been many years since so many putra daerah have been permitted to hold these posts. Javanese commanders, however, are stationed in all but one of those rawan (troublesome) Kodam where there has been serious recent bloodshed: Kodam 1 (the Aceh Merdeka insurrection), Kodam 2 (site of the bloody Lampung affair), and Kodam 8 (Irian Jaya, where the Organisasi Papua Merdeka continues its armed struggle). Because the Christian population of East Timor presents Jakarta with such intractable problems, it has been thought unwise recently to place a Javanese (Muslim) commander in charge of Kodam 9, and the present incumbent is a Christian Menadonese.

Two other "group" dimensions of internal military competition may be briefly mentioned. First, there seems to be no substantial change in a pattern where officers with either RPKAD (paratroop/Special Forces) and/or Intelligence backgrounds are visibly overrepresented. These are the characteristic features of General Murdani's own career and of his closest protégés—so that their visibility probably attests to his continuing personal authority, despite his removal to the weak Ministry of Defense and Security. It is also true, however, that intelligence and paratroop officers have necessarily played the major roles in the seventeen years of bloody counterinsurgency campaigns in East Timor since the initial invasion of December 1975. Insofar as action in the field typically assists an officer's promotion chances, East Timor may be more important than Murdani in influencing the RPKAD/Intelligence overrepresentation sketched above.

In addition, there is the question of how the various Classes of the Military Academy have been sharing the really key positions over the past two and a half years. The data are by no means complete, so any inferences must be rather tentative. The distribution is as follows:

Class 1 (1960)	5 positions
Class 2 (1961)	7 positions
Class 3 (1962)	8 positions
Class 4 (1963)	4 positions
Class 5 (1964)	1 positions
Class 6 (1965)	3 positions

To put it another way:

Class 1 is strong in key central staff and education-training jobs: Edy Sudradjat (Army Chief of Staff), Harsudiyono Hartas (Chief of the Social and Political Affairs Staff, ABRI HQ), Sugeng Subroto (Assistant for Operations, ABRI HQ), Soekarto (head of the National Defense Institute), and Sudarto (Commandant of the Armed Forces' Academy).

Class 2 is strong in the slightly lower central staff and education-training positions, with one important exception: Rajagukguk (Deputy Army Chief of Staff), Soetopo (Assistant for Personnel, Army HQ), Soenardi (Assistant for Logistics, Army HQ), Soegito (Assistant for Territorial Affairs, Army HQ), Faisal Tanjung (Commander, Staff and Command School), Toni Hartono (Commandant, Military Academy), Kentot Harseno (Commander, Kodam Jaya/Jakarta).

Class 3 dominates the Kodam commands, but holds other key positions: Pramono (Kodam 1), Nuriana (Kodam 3), Hartono (Kodam 5), Palaguna (Kodam 7), Mantiri (Kodam 9), Asmono (Assistant for Intelligence, ABRI HQ), Suryadi Sudirja (Assistant for Social Political Affairs, ABRI HQ), Arie Sudewo (Deputy Head of BAIS).

Class 4 has an important role in command of elite units: Wismoyo (Kostrad Commander), Kilian Sidabutar (Kostrad Chief of Staff), Kuntara (Commander of the Special Forces), and Harijoto (Commander, Kodam 4).

Class 5 is almost invisible. Only Haris Sudarno shows up as Kodam Jaya Chief of Staff.

Class 6 is most visible in regional commands at the Kodam and Korem levels: Yacob Dasto (Chief of Staff, Kodam 5), Theo Syafei (Commander of the East Timor Operations Command), and Yunus Yosfiah (Chief of Staff, Kodam 6). In addition there are Karyono (Commander, Korem 031/Riau), Widagdo (Commander, Korem 071/Purwokerto), Imam Utomo (Commander, Korem 084/Surabaya), and Budi Sujana (Commander, Korem 121/Pontianak).

These data have some deceptive features. Classes 4 and 5 are rather invisible because they now fill a range of operational, staff, and training positions which our list does not cover. Class 1 is being depleted by retirements made compulsory under the present administrative rules. Insofar as there is a contest for power within the military, one axis seems certainly that of the rivalry between Class 2 and Class 4, which may also correspond in part to pro-Murdani and pro-Palace sentiments. Classes 1 and 2 were the major beneficiaries of Murdani's 1983–1988 tenure of the post of Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces. Among the most prominent and influential members of Class 4 is Wismoyo Arismunandar, who is married to a younger sister of Mrs. Suharto. A major point of rivalry is over the succession to the position of Chief of Staff, for the widely respected General Edy Sudradjat (Class 1) is due for retirement on reaching age 55 in April 1993. He has been Army Chief of Staff for four years, twice as long as his predecessor Try Soetrisno. Classes 2 and 3 will not relish being passed over, but, given their proximity to retirement age, it would be quite normal in military practice to select as successor someone sufficiently young to be able to hold the position, without unusual extension of active tour of duty, for two to three years. Class 4 (mostly born around 1941) would benefit by such a calculus. Yet as of now Class 3 formally has the strongest nationwide base.

One last quasi-statistical indicator needs to be studied—the timing of transfers and promotions. The data below show some interesting features.

The pace of these changes seems rather routine, with two exceptions. First is the virtual cessation of rotations in the last half of 1991, for which no obvious explanation is available. The second is the big reshuffle in August 1990, in which the President appears to have benefited. Indeed, if one looks closely at those appointments which affect the immediate security of the Palace and its entourage, one gets a preliminary impression that the President has managed things with his characteristic craft.

In this regard, the important positions are these: (1) Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces; (2) Army Chief of Staff; (3) Kostrad Commander; (4) Kodam Jaya Commander; (5) Commander of Kodam 3/Siliwangi; (6) Chief of the Police; (7) Special Forces Commander; (8) Head of Bakin; and, perhaps, (9) Commander of Kodam 4/Central Java. In these positions we find: (1) Try Soetrisno, at least till the Santa Cruz massacre a presidential favorite, and former presidential adjutant (1976–1978); (2) Edy Sudradjat, a highly respected officer believed to be disliked by the Palace; (3) Wismoyo Arismunandar, presidential brother-in-law, appointed August 1990; (4) Kentot Harseno, former presidential adjutant, 1978–1980, appointed August 1990<sup>1</sup>; (5) Nuriana, from 1984–1987, Commander of Korem 061/Bogor, where the secondary presidential palace is located, appointed January 1991; (6) Drs. Kunarto, presidential adjutant, 1980–1982, appointed February 1991; (7) Kuntara, Academy classmate of Wismoyo, appointed August 1987; (8) Soediby, almost certainly a Murdani man from long-standing intelligence associations, appointed June 1989; (9) Hariyoto Pringgo Sudirjo, another classmate of Wismoyo, with whose career he has been closely associated, appointed August 1990. In this constellation of nine, seven have close personal ties to Suharto or to his brother-in-law Wismoyo.

Yet the evidence is not open to a firm conclusion. It could be argued, for example, that this clustering of ex-adjutants and relatives is a sign of the President's weakening position in the military. In his 26 years in power Suharto has never had to rely so visibly on a small clique, but rather commanded general loyalty among the soldiery. The history of modern militaries in the Third World offers plenty of reason to think that such favoritism usually produces a backlash among military professionals. Furthermore, the recent events in East Timor, no less than the longer history of the Indonesian Army, show that commanding officers are by no means always able to ensure the obedience of their subordinates.

It remains to offer some observations on other aspects of the military politics of the period under consideration. Military dissatisfaction with the President became increasingly open in the course of 1991, as exemplified by the blunt statements of Brig. Gen. Nurhadi Purwosaputro, Head of the Armed Forces' Information Center, that "it is time for him [Suharto] to retire . . ." and that many in the Army feel that "he has served long enough."<sup>2</sup> This dissatisfaction has been stimulated largely by the financial depredations of Suharto's children and other relatives, but also by the military's own financial difficulties, slow-downs in promotions, threats to the military's political dominance, and presidential favoritism in appointments.

A long feature on the military in Tempo, October 12, 1991, a bare month before the Santa Cruz massacre, is quite revealing on three of these concerns. It noted that of the Defense Department's Rp. 2.2 trillion (about $1.1 billion) routine budget, only 37% was set aside for procurement, and only 10% for maintenance. Yet maintenance just for the country's 12 F-16 attack planes cost $66,000,000. The Navy estimated it needed at least 30 frigate-class patrol ships, but had only 17, and "these were bought second hand." Its total operational strength was a mere 80–100 vessels, and "only 16 ships have been bought over the past 16 years." The Air Force could muster only 3 of the 8 attack squadrons which it believed minimal national security required. Furthermore, in straitened circumstances, the total number of generals has been, over the past decade, cut by over half (300+ in 1983 when Murdani assumed the Commander-in-Chiefship, to less than 150 in 1991).

Cutbacks in personnel and funds have in other respects begun to threaten the military's long-dominant position. In the same Tempo article, Try Soetrisno complained that the military needed 65,000 NCOs to serve as Babinsas (the "spearhead of our territorial development"), i.e. one for every village in the country. But at present one NCO has to service 5 villages on average. Interior Minister General Rudini noted that during his tenure the percentage of bupatiships in military hands had declined from 51% to 40%.

The military leadership, in which Christians are substantially represented, and which has traditionally been suspicious of Muslim "extremism," has also looked askance at Suharto's conspicuous recent attempts to enlist Islamic support as he observes his declining backing in the Armed Forces. This support may, in the eyes of the Palace, be crucial for pulling off a convincing victory for Golkar in the coming June 1992 elections, since there are already signs that many officers will not give the government electoral machine their longstanding, powerful backing. Rumors are already widespread that some will sit on their hands, or even quietly encourage the hitherto state-enfeebled PDI.

In this situation and atmosphere, the Santa Cruz massacre has played an explosive role. This is not the place to open a full discussion of recent developments in East Timor. It may suffice to confine a tentative analysis to the military aspects.

One must begin with a social-political phenomenon which has long been visible in Indonesia's remoter provinces, but which assumes especially damaging forms in an East Timor where, until the end of 1989, martial law essentially prevailed and local developments were almost completely shielded from scrutiny. This phenomenon involves lower- and middle-ranking, usually middle-aged, military personnel who have served long in these regions and are fully aware that they will go no higher. They do not have the connections to expect a very significant, prosperous, or respected retirement if they return to, say, Ngawi or Lamongan. But they have the opportunity to build powerful long-term local bases in the regions, first as representatives of the Center, later as real-estate speculators, fixers, commission-agents, local monopolists, and racketeers. These long-term prospects, meaning retirement in the regions, are helped by local alliances, including marriage connections (themselves or their children), business partnerships with local elites, and personnel manipulations through former subordinates within the active military. As "old hands," such military men are in a strong position to inveigle or obstruct "new broom" officers sent in from the Center. Essentially, we are speaking of the formation of local mafias, which also often have their eye on such "civilian" political positions as bupati, provincial secretary, and even governor.

The data emerging in the wake of the Santa Cruz massacre suggest that one dynamic element behind it was just such a local mafia. It is rather clear that one of the missions of the popular Menadonese Commander, Brig. Gen. Rudolf Samuel Warouw, when he took office in December 1989, just as East Timor was being "opened up" for the first time, was to clean up the conduct of the entrenched local military mafia. During his two years in office, over 300 military personnel were "disciplined" in various ways and for various abuses<sup>3</sup>—a policy line which naturally made him unpopular with many of his subordinates and encouraged plotting against him, even though he had the firm backing of the Commander of Kodam 9, Sintong Panjaitan. Arrayed against him, it appears, were two other forces in loose coalition with the mafia. One consisted of former Apodeti politicians, many of them functioning as bupatis and in the governor's office. This group had provided the first two disastrous Jakarta-appointed governors of East Timor in 1977–1982, Arnaldo dos Reis Araujo, Apodeti president, and Guilherme Gonçalves. They had long resented the 10-year governorship of the intelligent, popular ex-UDT leader Mario Carrascalao, had tried to discredit him, and now, with his final term drawing to a close, were eager to take over the governorship.<sup>4</sup> They

<sup>4</sup> See ibid., January 4, February 8, and especially February 15, 1992, where the key Apodeti politicians are identified as Abilio Jose Osario Soares (bupati of Manufutu), Armindo Soares Mariano (bupati of Dili), and Clementino dos Reis Amaral (member of Parliament). Soares is instructively described as "the strongest candidate [to found it possible to exploit the growing, and increasingly visible (after the apertura of December 1989), popular sentiment against integration with Indonesia, to convince Jakarta of Carrascalao's incompetence and the failure of the apertura policy. They were pretty certainly behind the appearance in 1991 of hooded gangsters (known locally as the "buffo" [clowns]) who by night terrorized the East Timorese population of Dili, and may, if some sources are to be believed, have infiltrated the commemorative procession to the Santa Cruz cemetery on November 12, 1991, bringing with them inflammatory banners and slogans.<sup>5</sup> Posing as East Timorese nationalists, they seem to have aimed to bring Carrascalao down and to get rid of Warouw (who may have hoped to become the next Governor).

The second force, now being mentioned in the press for the first time, is Lieut. Col. Prabowo (son-in-law of President Suharto, and eldest son of the nimble ex-PSI, ex-PRRI, ex-New Order Minister Dr. Sumitro Djohadikusumo), who served for some time in East Timor, and maintained good links with the Apodeti politicians and the local mafia—possibly with the idea of becoming East Timor commander himself at some point.

Exactly what happened in military circles on November 12 still has to be unravelled, but it is quite clear that the shootings were done without Warouw's orders, indeed without his knowledge. It seems certain that one of the units most responsible was Battalion 744, with territorial responsibility for Dili, and composed of East Timorese. It would be plausible to assume, given its key security role, that it has strong Apodeti antecedents and connections.

In any event the disaster was so great, and the international publicity so damaging, that unprecedented action had to be taken. In a highly unusual procedure, on December 28 Suharto intervened publicly—in his constitutional role as Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces—to dismiss peremptorily both Panjaitan and Warouw.<sup>6</sup> He also ordered the formation of a Dewan Kehormatan Militer (Military Honor Board) to investigate what had occurred and who was/were ultimately responsible. On December 31, the nine-man core membership of this Board was announced by Try Soetrisno. Military protocol requires that an officer must be "judged" by his superiors, and since Panjaitan was an outstanding member of Academy Class 4 (1963), this meant that the nine generals had to be selected from Classes 1, 2, and 3. In the event, seven of the nine, including the chairman, Maj. Gen. Faisal Tanjung, Commandant of the Army's Staff and Command School, came from Class 2.<sup>7</sup> Tanjung and his Class 2 companions were in an unenviable position. If they did not recommend severe action, they would be seen as engaged in an obvious coverup; if they followed the book, they would make plenty of enemies within the officer corps. Tanjung's own hopes of succeeding Edy Sudradjat were surely also engaged or menaced. In the end, succeed Carrascalao]. Aside from his excellent performance and clean record, he is a close friend of Lieut. Col. Prabowo, the son-in-law of Pak Harto."

<sup>5</sup> They are likely to be the successors of the notorious nanggala of the late 1970s and 1980s—East Timorese collaborators given special training by the Special Forces for intelligence, interrogation, and assassination work. See Far Eastern Economic Review, September 29, 1983. Substantial confidence in our analysis is provided by a report in Editor of December 7, 1991, which quoted the commander of Sector A/Los Palos, Col. Haryono, as describing the hooded pasukan (a word usually restricted to military and paramilitary units) as "a criminal group merely seeking to fish in muddied waters"; and commented that Warouw had given orders that they be shot on the spot if discovered!

<sup>6</sup> As Editor, January 4, 1992, blandly commented: "What has really dumbfounded people [mengagetkan orang] is why the change of command had to be carried out by the the Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces himself, and not by the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces."

the Board recommended unprecedently stern action. (Sudradjat later conceded publicly that their recommendations had had to be "softened for humanitarian [i.e. political] reasons.")<sup>8</sup>

The Board declared that what had happened in Dili that day had been outside the knowledge of Panjaitan and Warouw, but as commanders they had to take responsibility for their subordinates' actions. (By this logic, of course, Army Chief of Staff Sudradjat and Commander-in-Chief Try Soetrisno should also have been disciplined—but by whom?) The Board, however, did not urge that they be court-martialled. This fate was to be reserved for certain of their subordinates. It is rather clear that the Board—which in its report spoke of military personnel "acting outside the chain of command"—well understood the real problem, but probably because of the Prabowo connection felt unable to report with full frankness.<sup>9</sup> Nonetheless, Sudradjat proceeded to carry out a complete, massive purge of virtually all influential officers in the East Timor apparatus, at the Korem level and within Dili itself, striking right at the heart of the mafia in a manner that had never been previously undertaken.<sup>10</sup> He also went out of his way to insist that the "open door" post-1989 policy would not be reversed, thus indirectly aligning himself with the Warouw-Panjaitan-Carrascalao axis. Though two apparent hard-liners, Mantiri and Syafei, have been sent in to replace Panjaitan and Warouw, and both have considerable earlier East Timorese experience, there is as yet no reason to think that they are mixed up with the Prabowo-Apodeti-mafia nexus.

It is too soon to assess the longterm outcome—for the military—of these extraordinary events. There is certainly a widespread feeling that Panjaitan and Warouw are exemplary officers. Panjaitan is a Murdani protégé of many years standing, and has been widely considered a likely future Army Chief of Staff. Their disgrace is equally certain to be widely resented. The immediate target of this resentment is probably not Sudradjat (who has acted calmly and quietly), but Try Soetrisno, whose bellicose untruthfulness in public statements after the massacre has simply confirmed the general impression of his mediocre qualities.<sup>11</sup> Insofar as Try is regarded as a Suharto man, his potential fall should favor anti-Palace groups. To the extent that Prabowo's role is widely known or suspected within the military, this will also sharpen anti-Palace feeling among the officer corps. In the short run, however, Panjaitan's disgrace may encourage the President to appoint Panjaitan's classmate, Wis-

<sup>10</sup> The details, for future reference, are as follows: Assistant for Intelligence Col. Gatot Purwanto (Javanese); Assistant for Social and Political Affairs Col. Binsar Aruan (Batak Protestant); Assistant for Operations Col. Dolfi Rondonuwu (Menadonese Protestant); Assistant for Logistics Col. C.H.B. Sutopo (Javanese); Assistant for Territorial Affairs Col. Michael [sic] Suwito (Javanese); Assistant for Planning Col. Tutut Subari; Commander of Korem 164/East Timor Col. J.P. Sepang; Commander of Kodim 1627 Dili Lieut. Col. Wahyu Hidayat; Commander of Sector C/Dili Col. M. Thamrin.

Purwanto was replaced, according to different sources, either by Lieut. Col. Sujud or by Lieut. Col. Yohan Supit; Rondonuwu by Lieut. Col. Yudomo; Suwito by Lieut. Col. Bambang; Tutut Subari by Lieut. Col. Bosta; Sepang by Col. Dunidja, formerly Commander of the Core Infantry Regiment of Kodam 5; Wahyu Hidayat (AMN Class 13) by Lieut. Col. Syarifudin Zein (AMN Class 11), formerly Commander of the Kodim covering the kabupaten of Manufuhi. It is not yet clear who have replaced Aruan and Sutopo. See Editor, March 14, 1992. It is interesting to note that J.P. Sepang, who took up his Dili job in April 1991, had previously been Assistant for Operations, Kodam Jaya (1989–1991), and before that Commander of Brigade 1/Jaya, in which function one of his long-ago predecessors was Col. Latief of the September 30 Movement.

<sup>11</sup> Among his admirers he has recently won the soubriquet "General Bullshit," on account of his famous statements to Parliament early in December 1991, that the Santa Cruz massacre was provoked by the "crazed mob (amukan massa)", and "Peaceful demonstration? Bullshit!" See Editor, December 7, 1991.

moyo, as the new Chief of Staff. It will be instructive to see if this seasoned veteran of almost 50 years of military politics can pull off the maneuver.

Looking ahead to the somewhat longer future, it is clear that for the moment the military has been wounded publicly, and divided internally. At the same time, the officer corps seems certain to try to reunite and reassert itself. It will be well worthwhile watching its behavior during: (1) the coming elections. Interior Minister Rudini is already reported to have said that "200 seats will suffice for Golkar," a devastating 33% reduction in its strength, if really effected; (2) the coming battle over who will succeed Sudradjat as Army Chief of Staff—Wismoyo, Faisal Tanjung, or some nervous compromise; and (3) the run-up to the presidential elections of March 1993. Suharto is certain to make his public decision about a running-mate as late as possible, to keep his opponents guessing, and to divide them if possible. He is highly unlikely (willingly) to select anyone who could endanger himself or his entourage. But once the decision is public, there will necessarily be a major realignment of forces. With Suharto reelected for yet another 5-year term, it is hard to believe that the country will be patient enough to wait till 1998 to resolve the succession issue. But after March 1993, there will be no constitutional, consensual way to accomplish this aim.

Additional note: As we write, the news has come that three of the six directors of BAIS have been purged by Arie Sudewo, the intelligence agency's Deputy Chief and operating executive. They are Brig. Gen. Supandji, head of Directorate B (foreign relations), Brig. Gen. Bekar, head of Directorate F (planning), and Brig. Gen. Joko Lelono, head of Directorate F (administration).<sup>12</sup> The original published source for this report, Agence France-Presse, stated that these changes were part of an internal purge resulting from the intelligence agency's failure to anticipate and head off the crisis in East Timor. This connection, however, was immediately and indignantly denied by the Head of the Armed Forces' Information Center, who insisted that the changes were routine, and due to the impending retirement of the officers concerned. This claim is only marginally plausible since Supandji and Bekar are classmates (AMN Class 3) of Arie Sudewo, and presumably very close to him in age. Whether the purge is or is not directly connected to the Santa Cruz massacre, it is likely that Arie Sudewo has taken advantage of the turmoil in the military to remove a set of Murdani and Sutaryo "old hands" and replace them with men of his own. (All three purgees are long-term intelligence types, whereas their purger has had a meteoric recent rise through a range of field, staff, and intelligence positions: 1984–86, Commander of Korem 074/Solo; 1986–87, a Directorate head in BAIS; 1987–88, Chief of Staff, Kodam Jaya; 1988–91, Commander of Kodam 3/Siliwangi; 1991–, Deputy Head of BAIS.)

<sup>13</sup> A curious figure. According to an interview with Tempo, July 19, 1986, he had been a member of Battalion 744 which managed to kill top Fretilin commander Nicolao Lobato on Mt. Maubesi at the end of 1978. Born in Rappang, South Sulawesi, around 1944, he married an East Timorese girl. In 1979 he was sent for training at Fort Leavenworth, and on his return became Deputy Commander of the Special Forces' Group III in Makassar. He described his favorite pastime as playing back a video of his killing of Lobato.

<sup>14</sup> Maj. Andi Gerhana Lantara was born in Pare-Pare, S. Sulawesi, on May 25, 1956. He was graduated from the AMN in 1979 as a member of Class 18. He was then sent directly to East Timor as a second lieutenant. He is said to have distinguished himself there as platoon commander and Headquarters Company Commander. He later stood out as Commander of the Special Fretilin Crushing Company of Battalion 744 (manned mostly by East Timorese). Under him in this company was Suharto's later son-in-law Prabowo. The company played a key role in killing Nicolao Lobato (compare the conflicting information in note 12 above on this matter). After serving for 8 years in East Timor (1978–87) he was reassigned to Bali. Only in October 1990 did he return to East Timor as Deputy Commander of Airborne Battalion 700/Wirabuana. Reportedly stabbed by people in the procession going to the Santa Cruz cemetery on November 12, 1991—while in mufti and monitoring the procession. (Editor, November 23, 1991).
